Why Rural Matters to the Fed

• Rural places are critical to the economy

• While subject to significant regional variation, the populations of many rural communities are getting smaller, older and more diverse.

• Rural communities are more likely to be successful in fostering broad-based economic prosperity if they take an asset-based, equitable approach to their development activities.

The “TRIC” to Fostering Shared Economic Prosperity in Rural America

• The “TRIC” approach to rural development includes tailoring the approach to the community, designing it to be resilient and being inclusive and collaborative.

• Success is more likely if rural communities build from the inside on the things that make their community special, with an intentional focus on ensuring their efforts reflect and consider the needs and opportunities of all segments of the community.
5 Key Takeaways
1. Nearly all recent rural population growth has come from people of color

Nonmetropolitan Population and Population change by Race/Hispanic Origin

2. Local rural capacity requires community-based organizations

Six Ways to Build Inclusive Local Capacity

• Build local organizational capacity
• Foster robust local engagement and leadership
• Advance community planning
• Leverage partnerships and collaboration
• Promote wealth-building, financial capability and homeownership
• Strengthen community and individual resiliency

3. Rural counties have higher rates of self-employed business proprietors than metro areas

Entrepreneurship per 1,000 Residents

Most people mistakenly believe that startups occur overwhelmingly in metropolitan areas. Yet it is in fact rural counties that have higher rates of self-employed business proprietors.

- Rural (pop. less than 2,500, not adjacent to metro area) 234
- Rural (pop. less than 2,500, adjacent to metro area) 177
- Rural (pop. 2,500 to 19,999, not adjacent to metro area) 160
- Rural (pop. 2,500 to 19,999, adjacent to metro area) 140
- Rural (pop. 20,000 or more, not adjacent to metro area) 130
- Rural (pop. 20,000 or more, adjacent to metro area) 121
- Metro (pop. less than 250,000) 126
- Metro (pop. 250,000 to 1 million) 122
- Metro (pop. 1 million or more) 131

4. A significant factor in the difference between recovery and resilience is the leadership in place to support a community’s transformation from its past to its future

- Having professional staff is a critical need. Only 26% of remote rural counties and 35% of adjacent rural counties have an economic development professional on staff, compared with more than half of metro counties.

- Key to success in fostering mutually beneficial collaborations is initially established and maintained through convening. By way of convening leaders consistently, information is shared, relationships are developed, and trust can be established in a low-stakes environment.

- Other impactful partners include community foundations, community action agencies, and local health units.
5. Rural communities need access to capital to thrive
